Avidicare announces a partnership with Stark Tech in upstate New York.

Stark Tech is a market leading provider of engineering solutions designed to meet the critical needs of operating rooms across upstate New York and nearby areas. We have partnered to offer our customers an air distribution system that provides ultra-clean air for optimal infection control and superior comfort.

Global growth attracts Swedish media attention.

Avidicare's CEO Peter Höjerback was interviewed by Swedish local newspaper HD-Sydsvenskan about the ultra-clean Opragon system. Besides showing our new Showroom at Medicon Village in Lund, Peter also got the chance to talk about our visions for the future, how Opragon can help to minimize risk of infections in surgical wounds, and energy savings for healthcare.

New research comparing different ventilation techniques – TcAF on top again.

In a recent study, researchers from three of China's foremost universities and research institutes along with the renowned Danish Technical University, evaluated and compared four ventilation systems commonly used in ORs: vertical laminar airflow ventilation (VLAF), horizontal laminar airflow ventilation (HLAF), differential vertical airflow ventilation (DVAF), and temperature-controlled airflow ventilation (TcAF – named as TAF in the study). Using sophisticated models, the study quantitatively analyzed airflow distribution and BCP dispersion (Bacteria Carrying Particles). The findings revealed that the TcAF system exhibited superior performance in maintaining air cleanliness within the operating area compared to the other systems tested. Specifically, the TcAF system consistently achieved lower BCP concentrations, indicating its effectiveness in minimizing the risk of SSIs. Read more about it in our blog.
